

ANDERSON COLLECTION
AT STANFORD UNIVERSITY

Paper Weaving

This art project is inspired by the artwork At the Lake, Morning by Jennifer Bartlett in the Anderson Collection. She uses small squares that are abstract, then piecing them together into a grid to create a larger image. This project aims to emulate this artist's process with materials from home.

List of Supplies: colored paper, magazines, scissors, tape or glue. If you do not have colored paper, make your own unique paper by coloring patterns and shapes with pens or pencils onto a piece of white paper.

1: Using a ruler and pencil, take a sheet of paper and mark the top inch of the page with a line.

2: On the line made, mark out incremental spaces of one or one half inch with your pencil, depending on the size of the weave you would like.

3: Using your ruler, draw parallel lines from the half inch marks to the far end of the page.

4: With your scissors, cut along the parallel lines up to the first inch line at the top of the page. Do not cut past the first line.

5: Cut out half inch strips of paper or magazine. Be sure to keep them in order.

6: Weave the strips of paper you cut together with the loom you have made.

7: Finish by gluing or taping the ends of the strips to the loom

Tip: Share your artwork on social media with #MuseumFromHome and tag us with @anderson.collection.stanford